City Approves Budget For Upcoming Fiscal Year

BY WES FEESE
EDITOR

The Columbia City Council and Mayor Mark Harris met on consecutive nights earlier this week to give first and second reading to the proposed budget for the 2014-2015 fiscal year that begins July 1.

The almost $1.9 million in appropriations for the upcoming year exceeds expected revenue by just more than $248,000, and the estimated fund balance for this time next year is less than $40,000.

Some cost-cutting measures taken this year, as pointed out by councilor June Parson, were the exclusion of two full-time employees, one from the Garbage Dept., and the other a code enforcement officer.

"That's one of the things that keeps coming up is what can we live without?" Harris said Monday night. "I hate it, but we don't have a code enforcement officer budgeted this year. It's something we can probably do without him—we hate it, but that's where we are."

Even with two fewer salaries on the books though, Harris admitted that after several years of diminishing revenue from insurance, new sources of income were essential. He appointed councilors Craig Dean, Robert Flowers, and Parson to a new committee to assess additional revenue options.

Flowers voiced concern that the City will exhaust all of its resources before the next fiscal year ends if revenue doesn't increase.

Also notably absent from the proposed budget were raises for City employees, which were simply unrealistic given the current financial climate.

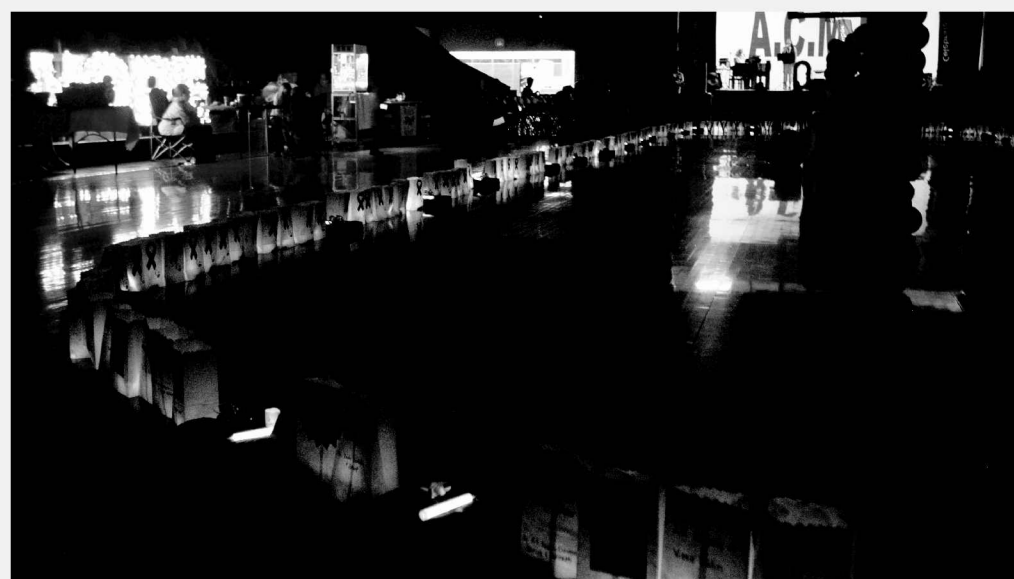

"They deserve a raise, they deserve a really good raise," Harris said. "We just don't have the money to do it."

The budget Harris proposed was accepted by a 5-1 vote of the Council, with only Charles Grimsley voting in opposition. Grimsley actually praised the budget as the best the city had passed in 15 years, but argued for more than the $14,600 set aside Parks and Recreation, asking for an additional $13,900.

Dean told Grimsley that hopefully the new committee could establish some new sources of revenue, and some of that money could go to Parks and Recreation, but councilor Ronald Rogers urged caution.

"Even if we get some added income we're not going to be living in Utopia," Rogers said, noting the City would still have to exercise frugality.

All councilors were present for Monday and Tuesday nights' meetings.

The luminary ceremony—always one of the more solemn moments at Relay For Life—was once again one of the highlights at this year's edition of the program. Bags and stones were lit up in memory or honor of loved ones that have battled cancer, and the lights on the scorers table to the left appropriately spelled out "HOPE."

Relay For Life Raises $56K

BY WES FEESE

The 18th installment of Adair County Relay For Life proved to be as successful as its predecessors, as almost 200 individuals showed up at the Adair County Middle School gymnasium last Friday night for an evening full of games, activities, and fundraising. When all was said and done, $56,000 had been collected for the American Cancer Society.

"We made more than we did last year, so I think it went really well," Relay chairperson Jennifer Smith says. "There have been a lot of charities doing things over the past few weeks, so for us to raise $56,000 is great."

Highlights of this year's program included a speech from Michelle Murrell recounting her recent battle with cancer, the annual survivor recognition ceremony, the luminary ceremony in memory of those that have battled cancer, and the always-popular games, activities, and giveaways.

School Board Hears From Grandmother Of Bullying Victim

BY WES FEESE
EDITOR

The anti-bullying campaign has gained traction in recent years at both the national and international level, leading to programs, documentaries, tutorials, and even legislation to help schools and parents curb peer-on-peer tormenting.

This issue was front and center at a rather brief meeting of the Adair County School Board last Thursday, when the grandmother of a 15-year-old female student chastised the district for its handling of her granddaughter's situation.

The woman—who The Adair Progress has chosen not to name out of respect for the student's privacy—told the board and Superintendent Alan Reed that her granddaughter was picked on to the extent that it caused her panic attacks, social anxiety, and fear of going to school. What began as a minor annoyance grew into a cause of major distress for the girl, and she missed several days of school because she couldn't bear the abuse, leading to truancy charges and an eight-day stay in a juvenile detention center.

Sometimes an illness in the family makes one examine his or her priorities. This holds especially true if that family member is a spouse, and for Danny Mouser it was a no-brainer. With his wife, Veronica, battling cancer, there simply wasn't time to cut,

Hospital Board Hears Pitch From Pain Management Group

BY BLAKE SPIRES
ASST. EDITOR

As Westlake Regional Hospital's battle to escape from financial squalor continues, the Adair County Hospital District Board of Trustees have increased their efforts to find creative and effective ways to generate much-needed revenue. Tuesday night's regularly scheduled meeting was no different, as the board heard from John Johnson, Vice President of Hospital Development for the Pain Management Group.

Pain Management Group, or PMG, is a hospital-based pain management center that partners with more than 30 hospitals across the Midwest to help control and correct the pain of residents in the area.

"Our goal is to build a network of comprehensive community hospital-based primary care pain management centers," Johnson said. "We want that sharing of information, that benchmarking of pain issues so we can use it to curtail not only pain, but those frequent flyers."

Johnson's allusion to frequent flyers refers to the growing

Editorial Commentary
Written By
Wes Feese, EDITOR

The past couple of weeks have been interesting as an American and as a sports fan because a big part of our cultural focus lately has been on—of all things—soccer. The 2014 World Cup in Brazil has captured even the most casual of fans’ interest, and for the most part, I would say that’s a good thing. Throw in the fact that the U.S. team has performed very well in its two matches thus far, and can advance to the elimination rounds with a win or draw against Germany today, and the future of the sport in America has never looked brighter.

Sadly, while the sport’s future might be bright in the states, there is a dark side associated, specifically its horrendously corrupt international governing body—FIFA. I’ve written before about the great sport of soccer and how I wished it was more popular around here, but the World Cup presents a conundrum because its run by FIFA and its cartoonishly villainous president, Sepp Blatter.

The list of criticisms of FIFA is a mile long and ranges from run-of-the-mill big-business shenanigans like avoiding taxes to straight up exploitation and human rights violations.

Many in Brazil, host of the 2014 Cup, protested the event this year, even though they’re widely known to be some of the biggest soccer fans in the world. Why? It might have something to do with the fact that it puts a huge financial strain on an already cash-strapped country. FIFA, while paying no taxes because it operates under the guise of a non-profit (with billions of dollars in the bank, go figure), will rake in almost all of the profits from merchandise, sponsors, and television broadcasts. Brazil, on the other hand, will foot the bill for the brand new state-of-the-art stadiums it had to build to host the tournament. One is so secluded in the rainforest that it can’t even be accessed by car or truck, but rather by boat. After these games are over, it might very well never be used again.

Allegations of FIFA officials accepting bribes are rampant, and—if true—help explain the bizarre 2010 decision to hold the 2022 World Cup in Qatar. Temperatures during this season routinely reach 115-120 degrees Fahrenheit. It’s not just a bad idea; it’s a potentially deadly one. If Qatar’s cooling systems—which have yet to be tested and have never been used in large stadiums—fail to make an impact, the quality of play will suffer due to the immense physical demands of playing in such dangerous heat.

Beyond the issue of players’ safety though are the issues of workers’ safety, specifically, the safety of slave laborers. In Qatar, migrant workers from Nepal are inexplicably not allowed to leave because their employers must grant them permission. The employers are in control of the workers’ passports, identification permits, and wages. Some go months without being paid and have to beg for food. The Nepalese workers are left with no other option but to accept the conditions or risk being arrested as illegal aliens since their employers hold all their paperwork.

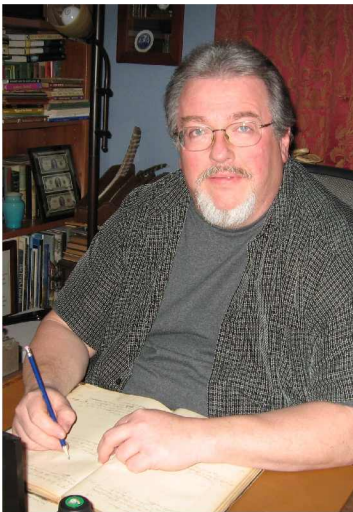

Then there are the deaths. Nepalese laborers in Qatar working on infrastructure for the 2022 Cup are dying at a rate of one per day. Some estimate that more than 5,000 will die in construction-related accidents before the Cup begins. Human rights groups all over the world have begged FIFA to intervene, to flex their considerable muscle as they did in Brazil by forcing the government to overturn a law banning alcohol in stadiums. So far, that hasn’t happened. FIFA will go to bat for a beer company sponsor but not for exploited and abused slave laborers. Classy.

I’m not saying any of this to encourage a boycott of the World Cup or to make anyone feel guilty about watching the games. The sport is great no matter how sleazy the executives are. Triumphs on the pitch are memorable regardless of the politics in the periphery. Just know though, that while you sit at home comfortably watching the drama unfold on television, many people suffered, many tax dollars were diverted, and some people even died to bring that entertainment.

A Brief History of Adair County's Fairs

Agriculture was the mainstay for the vast majority of Kentucky citizens in the 1800s. Since the early 1800s, agricultural meets, horse shows and general fairs had become a special interest of agricultural Kentucky. They began in the Bluegrass and spread across the state. To foster diversification and to bring new breeds and varieties into common use, agricultural fairs were promoted in the state as early as the 1830s. In April 1838 a second Kentucky State Agricultural Society was created to promote local agriculture and the societies it hoped would be formed to encourage production. Edward B. Gaither, son of Dr. Nathan Gaither, of Columbia, was one of the thirteen vice presidents of this Society, scattered across the state.

The Columbia Fairgrounds Association of Adair County was established on 10 March 1856 with Junius Caldwell, Robert Coffey, William N. Robinson, William Walker and Milton P. Wheat as commissioners. A capital stock of $3,000 was voted and shares were to sell for $25 each. The fairgrounds were limited to a total of twenty-five acres. This was the first attempt to bring organization to what would become a semi-annual fair.

In 1840 Russell County had a “fair,” but our first recorded interest in the fair business, locally, was this 1856 incorporation. It is not known how many fairs were held prior to the outbreak of the Civil War in 1861, but at least one or two are likely. The War brought this activity to a virtual standstill.

The Adair County Agricultural and Mechanical Association was incorporated 9 January 1868 with the following incorporators: Timoleon Bradshaw, Dr. Hector Owens, S.K. Rhorer, Henderson Wilson, Sydney Dunbar, Joseph Hunter, Thomas C. Winfrey, Alfred Gilmer, Joseph Coffey, William E. Baker, James R. Hindman and Thomas T. Alexander. The price of stock shares was set at $30,000, $25 each. This was part of the movement across the nation for agricultural advancement that came with the close of the War. The Adair County A&M, like associations across the state, was designed to foster interest in the agricultural pursuits of the local farmers and businessmen. This was the forerunner of the Adair County Fair.

The Adair Agricultural Association was formed 15 March 1884 and incorporated 28 April 1884 with the purpose of holding a four-day fair to promote local farm products. It was a direct result of a small agricultural exhibition held the previous year on William Henry Hudson’s land on the old Stanford Road. Organizers were William Henry Hudson, James P. Dohoney, G.W. Atkins, G.A. Thomas, Herschel C. Baker, W.T. Moore, W.B. Rowe and others. The capital was set at $3,000 to $10,000 and shares were $50 each. The compiler of this history has one of the original books of unsold stock certificates in his collection.

Officers were: H.C. Baker, president; G.A. Thomas, William L. Walker, O.B. Patterson, John C. Dunbar, Charles M. Sallee, T.P. Jeffries and George Lee, vice presidents; Joseph Coffey, treasurer; Dr. Buford T. Wood, secretary. Directors were H. C. Baker, Wm. H. Hudson, W. M. Smith, H. P. Willis, Z. M. Staples, George W. Atkins and W. Conover.

The first fair was held in mid-August 1884 at the Association’s grounds in Columbia and lasted four days. The ACAA had constructed an amphitheater, racecourse, music and judges stand, stock barns, etc. Food booths were abundant, but many families brought their lunch baskets. The amphitheater was oval and set inside the present racetrack, among the grove of trees. Inside the amphitheater was the show ring. The horse shows were the highlight of all the early fairs.

The 1885 fair began on 18 August with an address from James A. Kensey, Kentucky’s Secretary of State, music was provided by the Louisville Legion Band. Over 5,000 attended on Thursday, traditionally the biggest day of any of the fairs. A fair was not held every year, usually due to weather conditions or the lack of profits the previous year. There was a fair in 1885, 1891.

Articles of incorporation for the Columbia Fair Association were signed 18 March 1893 by Mont Cravens, N.M. Tutt, Wm. H. Hudson, H. D. Murray and John N. Conover, capital stock was set at not less than $3,000, with shares selling for $30. On 17 May of the same year Wm. H. Hudson and wife Mary, deeded the Fair Association nineteen acres on Russell Creek, known as the “Fairgrounds,” for $3,000.

The same nineteen-acre tract was sold for the Association at the courthouse door on the first Monday in April 1895 to James Garnett, Jr., Creed Hood, R.F. Paull, Robert Tucker, James T. Page, C.H. Smith, W.B. Rowe, M.O. Sallee, Scott Montgomery, George R. Miller, W.L. Walker, Wm. F. Jeffries and R.L. Hatcher. New articles of incorporation for the Columbia Fair Association were drawn up and signed in July 1896 by Wm. H. Hudson, L.B. Hurt, W.L. Grady, H.D. Murray, John N. Conover, W.F. Jeffries, W.A. Coffey, J.B. Coffey, Mont Cravens, W.H. Wilson and James Garnett, Jr. There was a fair in August 1896, but not another until 1901. A fair had been planned for 1898, but smallpox in the Casey Creek vicinity caused it to be postponed and later canceled.

The August 1901 fair was a success. Wm. H. Hudson was president and C.S. Harris was secretary of the association. A highlight of the fair was the horseless carriage provided by the Louisville Automobile Company, which gave demonstrations on the track each day.

The 1902 fair was a sensation. This was the year of the county’s centennial and a great “homecoming” was hosted for relations near and far. Thousands flocked back home from Illinois, Missouri, Texas and other western points. Another thrill of the fair was the hot air balloon that ascended every day. About this time Felix Royse and son, Sam, built and operated a wooden, manually propelled merry-go-round which was greatly enjoyed by fair-goers. In 1903 the Alexander Brothers, of Burkesville, brought their mechanical merry-go-round to the fair.

The Columbia Brass Band provided the music in 1906 and for several years thereafter. Members of the band were: George T. Flowers, president; Fred Myers, vice president; W.T. Price, secretary; J.E. Flowers, secretary; R.M. Feese, treasurer; Ewing Stults, C.C. Pickett, Ray Montgomery, Walter Sullivan, J.W. Young, Edgar Reed and L.L. Eubank.

J.H. Young purchased the grounds in 1916 and served as president of the fair association. The next spring he sold the land to the Wakefield Realty Company, of Shelbyville, and they divided the tract into six blocks, a total of 57 lots and proceeded to sell it. No houses were ever built upon this site. In 1921 the Columbia Fair Association was again incorporated with H.A. Walker, president; Sam Burdette, vice president; J.B. Coffey, secretary; J.L. Walker, treasurer; and W.E. Harris, O.P. Miller, L.C. Hindman, J.C. Bault, Clem Burton, Cortez Sanders and Elzy Young, board of directors. In 1926 a contract was made with Kentucky Central Electric Company to light the fairgrounds for the horse show.

During 1937 and 1938 new, modern horse barns were erected and floodlights were installed so that night programs could be initiated. There were no fairs in 1942, ‘43, ‘44, or ‘45 due to the war.

When the Veterans of Foreign Wars organized in Columbia in 1946, they discussed the purchase of the fairgrounds and conversion to a Memorial Park in honor of local men who lost their lives in WWII. The sale was made. The Board of Directors: Mason Judd, president; Alfred Flowers, secretary; William L. Walker, treasurer; Charles T. Cooley, James Ingram, William Wilson, James E. Lacy, L.W. Cole, Thomas M. Watson and Edgar Troutman, directors.

The Columbia-Adair County JayCees purchased the fairgrounds from the VFW in the 1990s and have carried out a successful fair each summer since.

epidemic nationwide, but especially within Kentucky and the Columbia area, of citizens addicted to prescription pain medication and the doctors who irresponsibly prescribe it.

“We are not a pill mill,” he reiterated throughout his presentation, citing the various approaches that PMG uses to combat pain, such as physical therapy, surgery, and even alternative approaches like acupuncture. “We don’t just hand out scripts.”

The proposed partnership between Westlake and PMG would create Westlake Regional Pain Management, LLC., a 51-percent Westlake-owned organization, where the hospital would front $51,000 of the initial $100,000 investment needed to begin operations, purchase equipment, and other areas necessary for the practice.

Once established, the clinic would serve as the catch all for patients experiencing pain. Patients would come in to primary care and then be referred to interventional pain management, who would align them with the appropriate care for their pain. This organized referral process would create a significantly increased volume of ancillary care for Westlake.

According to Johnson’s presentation, pain sufferers account for three times the number of the three other major conditions seen in hospitals, which are cancer, coronary issues, and diabetes. Such an amount of pain patients bog down physicians’ offices with general complains of pain, which often double the length of the average visit.

“They don’t know how to combat the pain,” Johnson explained. “What is normally a six or eight minute visit becomes a 15-minute one, and all they can usually do is prescribe pain medication.”

“We’re trying to get patients off of medication,” he continued. “We’re the polar opposites of those pill mills. A patient is just as dysfunctional off the medication as they are on it, so we want to address the root of the problem.”

While medication is still a part of managing the pain, PMG says that they have received approval from the Kentucky Attorney General and Kentucky Inspector General to meet rigorous standards regarding the prescription drug problem in the state, which ranks sixth in the nation in accidental death overdose.

Johnson took questions, explaining that PMG chose Adair County because of its untapped client base, with no other program like theirs in the area, and added that they will not partner with anyone within 30 miles of Westlake if the hospital chooses to go forward with the alliance. If agreed upon, PMG’s analysis predicts a $22,618 profit in the first year, and the group does not receive any payment until the entity is cash positive and the initial $51,000 is recovered.

“We know it’s financially sustainable,” Johnson said. “We’ve never closed a facility or lost a physician.”

Despite Johnson’s assurances of PMG’s integrity, members of the board and physicians in attendance remained hesitant about prescription pain medication abuse and the negative public perception such a partnership may entail, with Dr. Charles Giles urging the board to do its due diligence and gather referrals.

“As presented, this would be an excellent program,” Giles said. “I would ask that you go forward, but do so cautiously, because there’s a huge financial incentive to get recurring patients [who are addicted to pain medication].”

The board agreed to continue going forward with the process, and plans to gather increased information and referrals.

In other news at Tuesday night’s meeting, the Adair County Hospital District Board of Trustees:

•Heard the monthly CFO Report from David Hayes. According to the report, Westlake’s percent occupancy rates continue to fall, with total patient revenue down roughly $6 million from last year. Despite the decrease, however, a combination of revenue from meaningful use funds and drastic reductions in costs has seen an $872,990 improvement in net gain from last year.

•Heard an Administrative Report from CEO Neal Gold.

“Our biggest issue continues to revolve around our Chapter 9 [bankruptcy reorganization] and our Medicare and Medicaid recoupments,” he said.

As of now, Westlake remains at an impasse with the state government on the recoupment figures, but the federal courts have asked the two to continue negotiations, which will take place on August 9.

Gold also addressed allegations levied against the hospital at the last meeting.

“Regarding the food service allegations, what we’ve agreed to do is form a committee made up of a board member and outside citizens to do a formal investigation and bring the results back to the board.”

Gold named board member Brad Keltner as the chair of that committee and appointed Sue Stivers and Robert Flowers to join Keltner in the investigation, which is slated to begin immediately.

The CEO also praised the food staff for their work and dedication to the Relay for Life team, which raised over $1,200 this year, and then turned the floor over to Westlake’s Director of Marketing, Lori Wade.

“We’ve been doing as much as possible to get our name out in the community,” Wade began. “We want to let them know we care, are there for them, and have no intention of going anywhere. We want to gain that sense of security and trust.”

Wade then outlined the efforts Westlake has been making toward that end, including attending various events around the community, sponsoring vacation Bible schools and school-sanctioned events like band camp, donating items to residents of Summit Manor and reaching out to a number of clinics and physicians in the area that are not currently partnered with Westlake.

“People don’t know we offer some of these services, so I think we’ll see our referrals start to go up,” she said. “We want Westlake to be everywhere and present ourselves with a positive face so that we can let everyone know we care.”

Following the meeting, the board went into executive session under KRS 61.810(1)(C) for discussions of proposed or pending litigation against or on behalf of the public agency. No action was taken.

KYTC Graduated Driver License Course Now Offered Online

Gives students option of taking course anytime, anywhere

The Kentucky Transportation Cabinet (KYTC) today announced an online version of the Graduated Driver License course for teaching safe driving techniques to beginning drivers.

The online program represents a fourth option for completing the course, which is required before a learner’s permit can be replaced with an unrestricted driver’s license.

Until now, three options were available:

- A four-hour Graduated Driver License course provided by KYTC in the driver’s home county. The course is offered for free, and at least two courses are held per year in each of the state’s 120 counties.
- High school driver’s education course or similar course offered by a Kentucky community college, vocational school or Job Corps.
- Private driver training course at a driver training school approved by the KYTC Division of Driver Licensing.

The new, fourth option is an online course administered by I Drive Safely, a driver education website.

“Our hope is to make options available for every situation,” said Rodney Kuhl, KYTC commissioner of the Department of Vehicle Regulation. “We understand people have busy schedules and this new online option just adds another convenient way for those struggling to find time for our classroom course.”

The online course, which costs $15, takes about four hours to complete. The course can be taken when convenient for the drive and at the driver’s own pace, as long as the course is completed within 270 days of the initiated login. The money charged for the course is collected by the website administering the course, not the state.

Nearly 35,000 students take the Graduated Driver License course each year. Students taking the online course may have to wait 24 to 48 hours before completion of the course shows up on their driving records, but after the course is complete, a confirmation email will be sent to the student. The course is available online at <http://teen.idrivesafely.com/Kentucky>.

Once drivers have completed the course, along with other requirements under Kentucky’s Graduated Driver License Law, they are eligible for an unrestricted driver’s license. Guidelines for the state’s Graduated Driver License Law can be found online at transportation.ky.gov/Driver-Licensing/Pages/Graduated-Driver-Licensing-Program.aspx.

Commissioner Kuhl said the public’s interest in online driving training became apparent after launch of an online version of State Traffic School for drivers cited for traffic violations.

“The online Graduated Driver License Course is a logical extension of our services and another way to increase convenience for those looking for classes,” Commissioner Kuhl said.

•Bullying

“If a child has problems to begin with, why would you add to that [with truancy charges]?” the grandmother asked.

Director of pupil personnel Robbie Harmon commented to the board that he had met with the grandmother previously to try to deal with the problem, but admitted that it was never fully resolved.

Reed and the board members showed legitimate concern for the student and pledged to do anything in their power to end the harassment, an admittedly difficult task—especially when dealing with adolescents.

“If someone is bullying and picking on her, they’re probably bullying others, too,” board chairman Floyd Burton said.

As for the girls’ legal troubles stemming from truancy though, the board had less to offer the grandmother in terms of rectification, as board member Mike Harris explained.

“When it gets to that point [...] that’s the court system,” Harris said, explaining that the matter went beyond the board’s authority.

Superintendent Reed invited the grandmother and the student to come meet with him sometime over the next few days to try to work out a solution that benefits the student.

BOARD RECEIVES SUPERINTENDENT EVALUATION UPDATE

In the only other business at last Thursday’s meeting, Reed presented an update to the board on his delivery targets as superintendent and the progress that the district has made in those areas under his leadership.

Some of the data pertinent to the targets has yet to be released, and some of the targets are long-term goals that the district is still striving achieve, so the evaluation lacks finality, but the evaluation had to be submitted before the end of the fiscal year on June 30.

“Most of the data that would be there is not back,” Reed explained. “When that comes back in August, we’ll start reporting it as it unfolds.”

Notably, the target of increasing the cohort graduation rate over a five-year period looks well on its way to being met, since there was only one dropout in the 2013-

2014 school year. Adair County also increased the compulsory attendance age to 18 and hired a dropout prevention specialist in the past year.

The emphasis on college and career readiness appears to be paying off as well. Reed’s report stated that, according to preliminary statistics, the target of increasing the percentage of students that graduate college and career ready will be met. Starting next year, there will be 39 career paths available for students to choose from, each with curriculum specifically designed to prepare a student for their chosen field.

Lastly, and arguably most importantly, Reed explained that the target of increasing effectiveness among teachers and principals would be entering the full implementation stage next school year. The pilot program this year included eight teachers and one principal, and each made strides throughout the school year to reach the level of “accomplished,” which is the third highest rating.

All board members were present for the meeting.

Bruce White UCB’s Vice President of Lending

The Board of Directors of United Citizens Bank of Southern Kentucky announced Bruce White has been named as the bank’s Vice President of Lending. Mr. White has served as UCB’s Compliance Officer for the past several years and has a distinguished background in banking and lending.

“Bruce has been a great asset to UCB ever since he came aboard and I know he will do great things in this new role,” said CEO Matt Loy. “Bruce knows banking, but more importantly, he knows Adair County banking.”

A native Adair Countian, Mr. White has over 20 years of experience as a loan officer and has a background with all types of loans from consumer credits to large farming and commercial operations.

“We are very fortunate to be able to add someone of Bruce White’s caliber to loan officers like Philip Watson, Mike Curry, Mindy Coffey, Joe Collins, and Cindy Harris,” CEO Loy continued, “and I think it’s the best group of lenders you’ll find anywhere.”

Bruce will be at the bank’s Main Office at 700 Jamestown Street for all your credit needs.

rake, and bale the 75 acres of hay on his farm.

Luckily for the Mouser family, their friends and neighbors had their priorities in order as well, and put off their own jobs and obligations late last week and early this week to help out any way they could. Fifteen people showed up, with tractors, rakes, mowers, and balers to get the Mouser’s hay put up. They cut on Friday, and by Monday the hay was baled.

The men wanted no recognition for their act of kindness, and even asked that their names not be published, saying instead that they just wanted to help.

“Everyone just wanted to pitch in and do something,” one of the men said. “No one person did it; we just all wanted to get out and help if we could.”

The gesture was greatly appreciated by the Mousers.

“Veronica and I were just overwhelmed at their generosity,” Danny Mouser said Tuesday. “It’s unbelievable—I don’t know how to explain it but it we’re so, so thankful. Some were from Purdy church, some are neighbors, and some are people I didn’t even know were going to be there, but there they were and we thank them very much.”

•Relay For Life

Murrell told the crowd about her feelings of anxiety after learning of her diagnosis almost one year ago, and the fear of uncertainty that sets in when one doesn't know what the future might hold. She also told of the support she received though, and the feeling of triumph she felt when she was told she was cancer-free.

"February was my last chemo treatment, which I am very thankful for," Murrell said. "That's all behind me now, thank God." After Murrell's speech, cancer survivors were honored with medallions, presented by survivor chairperson Sue Stivers. Fifty-one survivors pre-registered to be included in the ceremony, and several more were added on the spot, including some of the oldest survivors from the Hens and Friends team from Summit Manor Nursing Home.

"Personally the highlight for me was seeing all the survivors, and the survivors from the nursing home especially," Smith says. "They had a ball—that's the stuff that makes it worth all the work."

The luminary ceremony began just after 9 p.m., as the lights were dimmed and the bags and stones lining the track around the basketball court glowed in the darkness. Each bag or stone represented someone who had battled cancer, with many of them honoring loved ones who lost their battle and have already passed on.

After the luminary ceremony, the relays and games began, and children and adults alike had a fantastic time participating in the various activities held throughout the remainder of the night. The scavenger hunts proved to be a fan favorite.

"Kids, adults, they all loved the scavenger hunt," Smith says. "It was so funny and everyone had the best time."

Of the money collected this year, 79-percent of the $56,000 will go directly toward cancer research, and the remaining money will be split between cancer education initiatives and the American Cancer Society's administrative costs.

Smith says planning for next year's Relay will begin next month. "We'll have a follow up meeting where we all talk about what we liked this year, what we disliked, and ways we can improve it next year," Smith says. "I'll be stepping down as chairperson so we'll pick a new chair and they will decide the date and the theme for next year."

A large group of cancer survivors were distinguishable among the hundreds of attendees at the 2014 Relay For Life Friday by their bright purple t-shirts, which signify their successful fight against the dreaded disease.

Participants in the 2014 Relay For Life, members of many different teams and organizations, came together last Friday night for a single cause—raising money for cancer research.

2014 Adair County Relay for Life

SuperBlane & Friends team member Shawn Bardin inspected a box of donuts on the table at his team's booth last Friday at Relay For Life.

The annual Survivors' Lap is traditionally a highlight at Relay For Life, and Friday night's ceremony was no different, as more than 50 cancer survivors participated.

Special guest speaker Michelle Murrell gave a moving speech last Friday night at Adair County Middle School to help kick off the 2014 Relay for Life. Murrell recounted her recent battle with cancer and offered support for those that are still fighting to overcome the disease.

This 1943 McCormick Farmall, owned by James Hughes of Lebanon, Ky., featured a custom pink paint job and decal to raise awareness of breast cancer.

Youngsters Conner Johnson (seated) and Dillon Wilson prepped for a turn with the tractor pull on this McCormick Farmall model tractor Saturday at the 18th Annual Homeplace on Green River/Russell Creek Antique Tractor and Gas Engine Show.

Tyler Dudgeon of Grayson County, Ky was up first in the Ball In The Bucket competition on his 1944 Alice-Chalmers B. Contestants weaved through an obstacle course of buckets, dropping a ball in each one as they went by.

There were plenty of good eats available Saturday with Mary, Ellis and Joe Creasom of Smokin' Joe's BBQ serving up pork chop sandwiches and other delicious grub at the Homeplace on Green River.

"We couldn't have done this without the whole team."

Mark Franklin is a walking miracle.

Last February, after suffering with severe headaches for several weeks, Mark sought relief at his local hospital emergency room. He was quickly transferred to Lake Cumberland Regional Hospital.

Mark had a brain aneurysm. Just days before, he was an active owner of his own carpentry and home repair business. "He could do anything," his wife, Melissa, said.

Mark spent 67 days in the Neuro ICU and the inpatient Rehab Unit at Lake Cumberland Regional Hospital. After a very complicated surgery, a massive stroke, a seizure, and multiple blood clots in his legs, things looked very bleak.

Unable to walk, stand, sit, feed himself, or even speak, Mark began his long, slow journey toward recovery. Melissa described Mark as a determined man. That grit and hard work paid off as his therapists worked diligently with him each day.

"We couldn't have done this without the whole team (at Lake Cumberland Regional Hospital)," Melissa said. "They all worked together – not just to help him and meet his needs, but to help me, too. They were so encouraging."

The Franklins will tell you they were blessed with great family and prayer support and are also grateful for the expertise of Dr. Amr El-Naggar, neurosurgeon, and Dr. P.D. Patel, neurologist.

Recently, Mark and Melissa, came back to the hospital to visit with their friends - Mark's physical, occupational, and speech therapists and his nurses. "I miss all of them," Melissa said. "I just love all these people and hate being so far away from them."

Always the encourager, Melissa advised others with similar experiences to not give up. "These people will help you do it!" She added, "If we have anything else – ever - this is where I want to be!"

On April 14, defying all odds . . . Mark walked out of the LCRH Rehab Unit.

He and Melissa were going home.

Columbia Teammates Attend Camp of Champions

Reece Giles and Kai Burton meet UofL standouts Peyton Siva and Russ Smith

BY BLAKE SPIRES
ASST. EDITOR

With the recent dominance of the college basketball landscape by Kentucky’s two most prominent programs, it’s no wonder that this week brings our second tale of summer basketball camps in as many weeks. This time, however, the camp was headlined by two NCAA champions and former Louisville Cardinals and provided youngsters from across the country the chance to learn from two of college basketball’s best guards in recent memory.

Twelve-year-olds Kai Burton and Reece Giles attended the first-ever Camp of Champions in Louisville last week, June 16-18. Former Cardinals Peyton Siva and Russ Smith, who led Louisville to the 2013 National Championship, hosted the inaugural camp. Boys and girls ranging from age 6-16 attended, with one session for ages 6-10 and another for ages 11-16. In all, more than 200 kids attended the three-day camp.

Kai and Reece, best friends and teammates since preschool, were part of the 11-16 camp, where they worked on fundamentals and being a team player.

“I wanted to meet Russ and Peyton and get better as a player,” Reece explained.

“Two of my favorite players were there,” Kai added as his reason for attending. “Plus I just love basketball.”

The pair was joined by campers from as far away as Chicago, and had the chance to interact with and learn from the two Cardinal greats. The campers played games, did drills, and even played five-on-five in front of and with their heroes, which both Kai and Reece listed as their favorite part of the camp, along with meeting Siva and Smith and getting their pictures made with them.

Although both gained memories to last a lifetime and enjoyed themselves immensely, the focus of the camp was still on basketball, and both say they improved as players during their three-day camp experience.

“I learned how to play better defense,” Kai, a guard, said after learning from Louisville’s top-two all-time leaders in steals.

“I learned to never stop trying,” Reece said, showing that he, too, had picked up signature traits of the two former Cards. “They taught me to always listen and work hard at what you do.”

With the 2014 NBA Draft tonight, every column like mine across the country is undoubtedly talking about Joel Embiid. The Kansas seven-footer was discovered to have a broken navicular bone in his right foot last week, shaking up the top of the draft. The foot injury joins back issues that plagued Embiid all season and these frequent health concerns have drawn comparisons to players like Sam Bowie, Greg Oden and even Yao Ming—all prospects that were immensely talented (and drafted accordingly) that ultimately underperformed due to injury.

So by the time NBA Commissioner Adam Silver announces the first pick tonight, it will almost assuredly not be Joel Embiid, and you will have almost assuredly read a thousand stories about Bowie over Jordan or Oden over Durant and how Embiid over Andrew Wiggins or Jabari Parker would be the same mistake. So that isn’t what this article is about.

That’s because, even with his injury, Joel Embiid will be drafted somewhere in the top 10 picks tonight, and will sign the guaranteed, multi-million dollar contract that goes with it. He will likely recover and play at a high level after missing significant time in his rookie season, with issues that could very well linger throughout his career. His NBA career may not be of Hall of Fame caliber, but he will have one. He’ll make lots of money and experience his dream. Relatively speaking, Joel Embiid will be fine.

Isaiah Austin will not. The lanky, seven-foot-one former Baylor Bear was once projected to revolutionize the center position. In high school, for a time, he was thought to be the number one pick in the NBA draft one day, and if players could turn pro out of high school, it’s possible we’d have seen his name atop the mock draft boards back then. After an inconsistent career at Baylor, Austin was thought of as a late-first, early-second round pick with some intriguing skills and undetermined upside.

That is, until NBA combine testing revealed that Austin has Marfan Syndrome. Marfan Syndrome is an inherited disorder that affects the heart, eyes, circulatory system and skeleton, and it ended Austin’s NBA career before it began. The big man took to twitter Sunday after announcing the news on ESPN.

“The draft is four days away, and I had a dream that my name would be called. I’m sorry [my fans and supporters] couldn’t see me play in the NBA. But it’s not the end. It’s only the beginning.”

I appreciate and admire his resolve. That’s impressive strength and courage in the face of having your life-long dream crushed, and it’s not something I can tell you with certainty I could say—whether I really meant it or not. While this may be the beginning of a successful and fulfilling off-the-court career, sadly, this is the end of his NBA dream.

I hope this garners a ton of attention and that the attention can turn such heartbreaking news into a positive for both Austin and others who suffer from Marfan Syndrome. I hope the education he earned at Baylor serves him well, and that he can successfully battle his condition and live as long and healthy a life as possible. Ultimately, he may contribute more good to the world having never played an NBA minute than he would have if he had been a career journeyman.

But tell that to a young guy that has worked toward one thing for his entire life and had it snatched away less than a week before it was to become a reality. Tell that to a guy who had his retina detached at age 16, but fought through it to continue chasing his dream. Tell that to a guy who couldn’t turn pro when his stock was the highest, and who either missed his chance to be drafted and get paid, or had a potentially life-threatening illness go undetected for three years because the NCAA doesn’t spend the money to have thorough testing done on its players.

I don’t mean to point fingers, as this is just a genetic disorder that went undetected. It’s a tragedy for Austin and his family all the way around, and there’s no one to blame but nature. Still, as someone who frequently cheered against Austin and Baylor during his career, it’s something you’d never wish on anyone.

So as you settle in to see the loaded class of 2014 be drafted and hear all the chatter about Embiid and when he’ll be selected, keep in mind that there’s another super-talented seven-footer, a Joel Embiid before there was Joel Embiid, who won’t hear his name called—at all.

Central Kentucky Bulldogs Runners-Up In Tennessee State Championship

The Central Kentucky Bulldogs eight-and-under team traveled to Lavergne, Tenn. to the 2014 Tennessee BPA State Championship over the weekend. The field was stacked with 35 of the top BPA teams from both Kentucky and Tennessee.

The Bulldogs went 2-1 during pool play on Friday and Saturday, setting them up for Sunday’s tournament as the No. 4 seed. The Bulldogs cruised through the first game of the tournament setting up a matchup with the top-seeded Tennessee Bluejays, the odds-on favorite going into Sunday’s tournament. The Bulldogs again cruised to victory, 12-6, over the Bluejays in perhaps one of their strongest performances of the season.

The win set up a finals matchup with the Wilson Vols who knocked off the Bulldogs 14-13 in seven innings a few weeks ago in another finals matchup.

The third game in one day seemed to be too much as the Vols played strong and defeated the Bulldogs 13-6 in the Tennessee BPA State Finals. Several stranded runners, a few defensive mistakes, and 11 very tired young boys proved to be the difference in Sunday’s final.

Hats off to the Wilson Vols out of Wilson Co., Tenn. on a great tournament. The Central Kentucky Bulldogs 8U baseball team continues to thank each of our communities for their support and we are very proud to call ourselves 2014 Tennessee BPA State runners-up. Game-by-game results are below:

Game 1: Bulldogs 6 vs Crieve Hall Mavericks 1
Game 2: Bulldogs 5 vs Irish Baseball Club 6
